

Dear Friend,

Since I figured that everyone was cooking last Thursday, there was no recipe--instead a look at a Thanksgiving when we would have been thankful if there was only a turkey...

Then, a look at a new museum. Don't let the name keep you from going, it's a pretty amazing space! The new December calendar was taken in one of the rooms.

As always, I'd love it if you could spread the word and get your friends to sign up! Or you can click the icons above or below to send to a friend, share on Twitter, Facebook, or LinkedIn.

Enjoy!

Thanksgiving Disasters, Have You Ever Lost a Turkey?

Most Americans prefer white meat turkey. Strangely enough, the Accidental Locavore's family is primarily a dark meat chicken or turkey group. One year at Thanksgiving we had about a dozen people for dinner, and when we were done, the back of the turkey looked like it had been dipped in acid, not a morsel left, but the breast was almost totally intact.

The following year I thought I was being smart by ordering a turkey and four extra legs so there would be plenty of dark meat for all. Read More:

Museum of Feelings

Whoever would have thought that inviting the Accidental Locavore to the opening of the new Museum of Feelings was a good idea? I admit that part of my acceptance was because it was soooo unlike something I would sign up for. However, every now and then you have to go for it – step out of your comfort zone and get down with your feelings. Read more:
