Accidentallocavore®

Dear Friend,

If you get two newsletters this week, yes, they're different! One seems to have never been sent and when I was doing the archives, it was found and sent.

This week, there's a funny look at what happened when I went foraging for morels and a great chicken recipe from David Lebovitz (also with a funny ending), that I've now made twice! And some great looking French radishes grace the June calendar.

Why don't you invite your friends to sign up for the newsletter? My goal is to double the readership, so if everyone reading this can get a friend to sign up...Or you can click the icons above the logo to send to a friend, Twitter, Facebook, or LinkedIn.

Enjoy!

Anne

Accidental Locavore Gathering – Morel Edition

Foraging for mushrooms is something the Accidental Locavore has wanted to do for years. Ever since a friend of mine gifted me with a big bag of chanterelles he found behind our golf course, I've wanted to go in search of mushrooms. However, unlike some kitchen experiments, that might make you sick if screwed up, gathering the wrong mushrooms can kill you – definitely a deterrent! So I was happy to discover (and join) the Mid-Hudson Mycological Association.

David Lebovitz's Chicken Lady Chicken

The Accidental Locavore thinks that one of the great pleasures of being in France is the availability of great roasted chickens at almost every butcher. Poulet roti has been elevated to an art form (and is one of the main reasons we could never buy a grill without a rotisserie). So, when I saw this recipe in David's My Paris Kitchen, I knew I had to give it a try. If you've never butterflied a chicken, it's really easy, but if you're fearful just ask the butcher to do it for you.
