The Accidental Locavore Cooks With Ramps: Ramp Pizza with Bacon

The Accidental Locavore's friend Cozy had asked about ramps. If you're not familiar with ramps they're a trendy locavore Spring obsession-otherwise known as wild onions. They have a taste similar to a scallion but more mellow and not as sharp. Since it had paused raining for an hour or so, I decided to cruise down to locavore heaven, the Union Square Greenmarket, in search of ramps and possibly more rhubarb (for chutney, recipe Friday). Found plenty of ramps and more. For dinner that night, I decided to do a pizza bianco based on a recipe from Food & Wine with the addition of some local bacon and the last, lone corolla potato from farmer Paul. This made one 12" pizza good for two greedy people.

Blogger Editor's Choice!

Just got an e-mail from Blogger. They're making the blog "What Does a Locavore Eat in the South of France" an editor's choice! If you haven't seen what a locavore eats on the Cote d'Azur, check it out here and please comment early and often!

Many thanks!

Asparagus Abroad

Thanks to my new Twitter friend Alison, we're now in the UK! She just posted the recipe for asparagus marinated in mayo. If you want to see how to make it in metrics, find her @EasyMealPlanner

And check out these beautiful food markets around the world (mine's the one of Nice):
