Who Knew Cheese Could be a Minefield? Wednesday With Dorie

OK, true confession time: Dorie Greenspan has the life the Accidental Locavore aspires to. It would be easy to be jealous, however she is so delightful that it simply goes away. At a recent lunchtime book talk at the James Beard House, she charmed everyone with her tales of falling in love with France. If you've never been to France, or are one of the few (misguided) people who supported "freedom fries" you can stop reading now. For the rest of you, here's how the Locavore spent a very pleasant hour.

What Color is Your Recipe? French Onion Soup Recipe

The Accidental Locavore was standing over a pot of onions for French onion soup when something Dorie Greenspan said last week struck me. She said that when you're writing a recipe, it's important to give instructions as to what the dish should look like, as well as the time involved. For the onion soup, Julia Child says the onions should cook for 25-30 minutes and be "a dark walnut color". So I'm stirring my onions, watching as they go from off-white to light brown and then to walnut, a process that does end up taking 30 minutes.
