Hurricane Irene, the Accidental Locavore Looks at the Aftermath

Tonight, the Accidental Locavore actually got this week's farm box delivered. We had stopped by the farm earlier, but Farmer Paul said nothing was ready yet. So he showed up on the doorstep with his son, one holding a small box of jewel-like cherry tomatoes, the other lugging a huge box with mammoth heirloom tomatoes, a big round watermelon and one of the biggest, dark shiny eggplants I've ever seen. No wonder they won 12 blue ribbons, 11 seconds, 3 thirds and grand champion for vegetables at last week's Dutchess County Fair!

That was the good news.

The Accidental Locavore Visits Serevan Restaurant

What happens when you mix a really good restaurant with a truly professional chef? You get a great place like Serevan. Besides making delicious food, Serge, the chef, makes everyone feel welcome. If it's your first time, celebrating a special occasion, or you're a regular, he goes out of his way, literally and figuratively to make you feel at home (only with better food). Even a large group on a rainy Saturday night, when the place is packed, is given a warm reception and a call is made to another restaurant to save a table. His generosity extends to sharing recipes and giving cooking tips.
