The Best Eating and Drinking in Vermont

The Accidental Locavore hadn't been to Vermont since sometime in the last century, and aside from six weeks of intensive French at Middlebury College, I've never been there in the summer. So it was a nice break from the hustle of New York, to spend a couple of days there, in the Burlington area. My friend Betty and I were up there for the Cheesemaker's Festival, but since there comes a limit to how much cheese even I can consume, we ventured out to explore some of the area's restaurants.

Grilled Pork Chops With Pickled Peaches

Understand that when the Accidental Locavore invites you over for dinner, it's usually to be a guinea pig for whatever has been on my radar. And in the summer especially, one thing usually leads to another. I'd been wanting to try a pork chop recipe with pickled peaches I saw in Food & Wine so it was a good excuse to have a couple of friends over for a grilled dinner.
