

Dear ,

First of all (a day early) Happy Birthday to my brother, where ever you are! Because he's such a barbecue fanatic, how about this incredible marinade for pork? Followed by dessert.

The Best Marinade Recipe for Pork*

The other day, seduced at the butchers, the Accidental Locavore's husband came back with a lovely pork roast to rotisserie. We've done them with hoisin in the past, with certain degrees of success. I had seen a recipe for Hoisin and Ginger Spareribs in the most recent Saveur and thought it should work just as well for my roast. My version made enough to marinate the pork and have about a cup left that we heated up and used for sauce.

Beige, Toothless Desserts

As the Accidental Locavore was writing about No. 9, it occurred to me that I'm a little fussy about desserts. First of all, savory foods interest me much more than sweets. A plate of cheese is my favorite dessert in France (and most of the rest of the world, if they can get it right). And there's a whole category my friend Leslie refers to as "beige, toothless desserts," or food that jiggles, that I can easily live without.
